Grand Central Palace Turned Into Mining Camp and Other Things for Event.

While money mad gamblers feverishly crowded around the whirring roulette wheels, faro bankers, three card monte sharks and crap games in the Grand Central Palace yesterday afternoon one might have noted in a chair removed a bit from the general gayety a human figure sugging with sorrow. It was none nate of the Bartlesville-wherever that is-Interurban Railway Company of Barclosville, Okla .- wherever the deuce Oklahoma is.

At first glance there seemed no reason why Railway Magnate Bill Merritt to the weeping. He had come all the from Oklahoma to the Grand Central Palace purposely to be entertained at the big birthday party for Henry L. a function that occupied arge part of Grand Central Palace yesterday afternoon, last night and much of this morning. Bill Merritt started for Manhattan about two weeks ago, riding on his own Bartlesville Interurban to the send of the line. to the end of the line, thence on foot to the nearest white settlement and then by prairie schooner and horseback until, upon reaching the furthest western fringe of civilization, he caught a com bination passenger coach and freight train that brought him in time to a trunk line train at Hellandsone, which brought Bill into New York

"I've never realized it before, but I do miss dear old Bartlesville." Bill Merritt said brokenly. Bill Deeply Touched.

"This afternoon the sight of the painted dance hall, the gaming tables and all the cowboy costumes you lads are wearing here at Hank's party brought me to the verge of tearful home-sickness for another sight of the movies in the Elite Bijou back home. Pardon my display of weakness, boys. On with the dance."

the dance."

They assured Magnate Bill Merritt that Manhattan showmen also had opened movie houses along the city's main street here, wherein Bill undoubtedly would be able to see movie stuff showing Western scenes amid red plush surroughdings almost as luxurious as the furnishings of the Elite Bijou in Bartlesville. Whereat Bill Merritt cheered up nermaneally, thus removing the only permanently, thus removing the only note of sadness from the big party in Hank Doherty's honor.

The surprise party which the bankers, public utilities imagnates and Manhattan business associates of Hank gave in celebit from the general gayety a human bration of his forty-eighth birthday was so that no one will lose their job, by figure sagging with sorrow. It was none begun at 4 o'clock in the afternoon slipping Ned Weyburn (it will only be other than Bill Merritt, the biggest magtendance were out of town citizens-very far out of town—who did not care to go through the streets of wicked New York after dark. Darkness for These Lads.

Would Magnate Frank Lowry of the Dominion National Gas Company of Ontario, Col. Bill Barker of Denver, Dick Wotowitch of Philadelphia and the rest of the small town boys venture out then? Nope. So the only thing left to do was to continue the function right on through the dark hours of the night and so on until dawn to-day and after. Wherefore, once it was light again this morning, the visiting lads from the simple towns ventured forth toward their various hotels. Hank and the rest of the New York boys surrounding them to see that they did not get lost in the mazes of Forty-second street.
